

ICD-10-CM Coding Summary

This resource contains information regarding ICD-10-CM diagnosis codes that commonly support the medical necessity of certain specimen collection techniques that may be performed in-office. These techniques are categorized below by the relevant CPT® codes. The information in this document presents common ICD-10-CM codes to consider; an ICD-10-CM code should be used only if the treating physician determines that it accurately represents the patient's signs and symptoms, and a CPT® code should be used only if the treating physician determines that it accurately represents the pathology managed. Additionally, medical necessity requirements vary by payer, and an ICD-10-CM code may not support use of a certain CPT® code for all payers. Bako Diagnostics does not claim that the information shared here is all-inclusive or recognized by all third-party payers.

A hyphen (-) at the end of an ICD-10-CM Code stem indicates additional characters are required to complete the diagnosis code.
